FREQUENTLY ASKED QUESTIONS

Q: Does it mean that I have to stay in the “bush” for it to be environmentally conscious

A: No, on the contrary, there are many facilities which offer modern facilities in comfort and style while ensuring that their operations are environmentally conscious eg the use of solar panels, waste management etc. There are also mainstream facilities that have made strides in their operations so as to heed the increasing voice of doing business responsibly.

Q: When is the low season or the best time to travel?

A: The tourism industry follows international guest arrivals therefore the low season is in the months of April-May when international arrivals are low, high seasons: June -March. If planning to catch the “world’s best show’ that is the wildebeest migration, the months between June and October are the peak months in both Tanzania (Serengeti) & Kenya (Mara)with the wildebeest crossing from Tanzania into Kenya and then returning to Tanzania. Resident rates which are lower than the non-resident rates, however apply to citizens and expatriates with work permits.

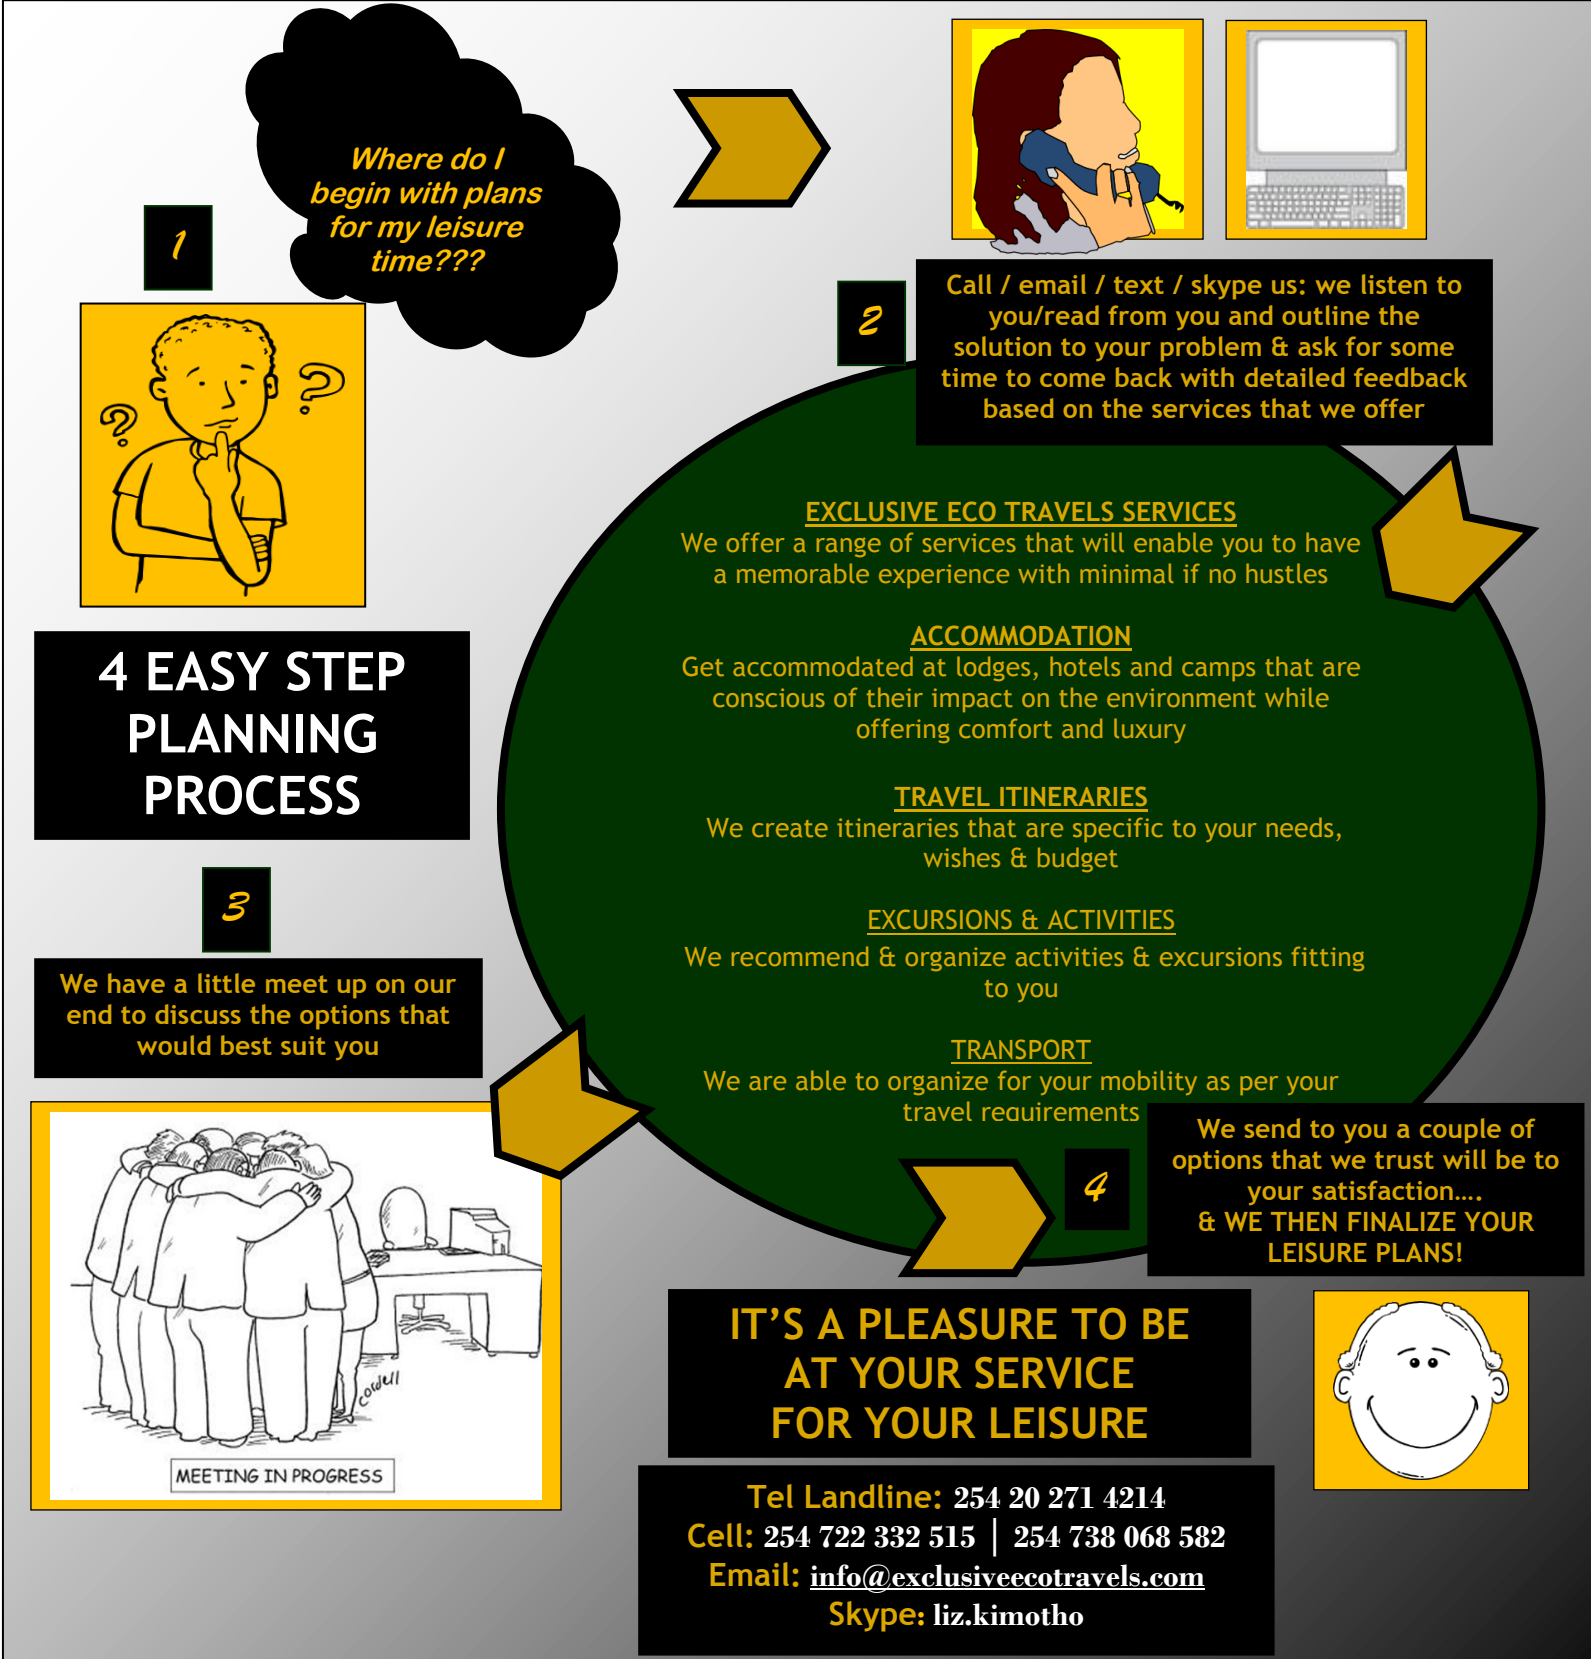

Q: Why is going on holiday so expensive?

A: For anything well planned in advance, costs can be managed, it therefore helps to identify in good time when you would like to travel to enable having a wider range to choose from in line with your budget range and needs. Last minute bookings can be quite expensive as the cheaper options tend to be taken up earlier. By booking earlier, you can also manage the payments in installments.

Q: Why would I need a travel agent, can't I just book everything directly?

A: While this is the case for many people, the peace of mind and convenience with dealing with an agent who is readily available and can keep you in the know when facilities are giving special deals can make your travel planning that much more hustle free. The agent can also assist you with up-to-date information of what is going on which can be of use to you when deciding on which travel option will best suit your interests and tastes. They can also act as a “one-stop-solution” in regards to your preparations before, during & after your trip.
